DAWICKI VS. GREEN

DOYLESTOWN, Apr. 22—Serving as their own counsel, two brothers won their case in the Bucks County court here yesterday, they having been named defendants in a $10,000 damage suit, the outgrowth of a two-truck collision.

Judge Calvin S. Boyer was the presiding judge, and the jury deliberated for 1 1/2 hours before returning the verdict in favor of Joseph Dawicki, Tilton street, Philadelphia, driver of a truck which crashed into another truck on a highway near Emille on November 18, 1936.

Earlier in the trial, before the jury retired to deliberate, Judge Boyer gave binding instructions concerning the other defendant-brother, Walter Dawicki, D street, Philadelphia, directing a verdict in his favor because of the circumstances of the case.

The plaintiffs were Mallieu Green, 34 Trenton, N. J., and the Standard Accident Insurance Company, Phila. The negro plaintiff received the sum of $2302.78 in compensation following the loss of a leg.

MARTIN GIVEN MEDAL AS OUTSTANDING '41 PENNSYLVANIAN

Gravity of War Touches The Lives of All Americans,
He Says

CANNOT WIN ON FAITH

Candidate Says There Must Be No False Illusions As To
Our Invincibility

PHILADELPHIA, Apr. 22—In an address accepting a medal presented to him Saturday by the Sons of the American Revolution in recognition of his services as the "outstanding Pennsylvanian in 1941," General Edward Martin, Republican candidate for the Governorship nomination, said:

"The gravity of the war in which this country is now engaged touches the lives of all Americans.

"The most stupendous stakes in the history of the world are the objective in this war. The destiny of every American is wrapped up in the result of this great international conflict.

"America is now in a situation comparable to Valley Forge and the critical days preceding Gettysburg.

"We cannot win this war on faith alone. Work and co-operation on unlimited scale must be the handtools of final victory. Regardless of the seriousness of the times, men in every walk of life are working for political, social and economic advancement.

"They must be warned that anything which retards production only prolongs the terrible consequences of war; increases our casualty lists and contributes to the decline of national economic security.

"There must be no false illusions as to our invincibility. Germany and her allies are determined to win. We can only guarantee the ultimate victory for this country by co-ordinating our resources and showing courage and resourcefulness worthy of our ancestors.

"Should the United States lose this war we would become a completely bankrupt nation. Private fortunes and savings would be gone. Defense Bonds would be worthless. Our 70 per cent of the world's coinable gold would be seized. We would lose our Navy and merchant marine, our coal mines, our oil fields, our foundries and manufacturing industries.

"The entire structure of American independence and freedom would be snapped under the whirlwind of the conquering nations.

One Man's Opinion By WALTER KIERMAN (I. N. S. Staff Writer)

We are warned by Archibald MacLeish that the Nazis' newest secret weapon is a peace offensive.

Our instructions are to shoot the dove and send the feathers back to Adolf with a pot of tar and directions for self-application.

Mr. MacLeish has an idea that the Nazis may try to sneak over their peace blitz during the coming summer and bathers will kindly watch the water for signs of drifting olive branches.

Right now it would be difficult to slip any kind of a peace proposal past the American people.

However we will watch for it and that means keeping the eye on Laval as well as the big bad three.

Many Fires at Rabaul

United Nations Headquarters in Australia—Numerous damaging fires resulted from heavy bombings by United Nations airplanes in a new attack against the Japanese-held base at Rabaul, New Britain Island, General Douglas MacArthur announced today.

Issuing communique No. 2 from his headquarters as Supreme Commander of United Nations forces in the Southwest Pacific, General MacArthur also revealed that American and Australian fliers had downed four Japanese zero fighter planes which attacked the United Nations base at Port Moresby, New Guinea.

Wharves and buildings were set ablaze yesterday in the bombing of Rabaul, the communique said.

The four Jap planes were shot down by United Nations fighter craft which intercepted a squadron of eight bombing planes escorted by fighters which attacked Port Moresby yesterday.

The defenders suffered no losses, General MacArthur said.

Revolt Spreads in Occupied France

London—Faced with riots and assassination as the fruits of Pierre Laval's appointment as chief of the French government, German authorities in occupied France took drastic measures today to stamp out the flames of spreading revolt.

There were reports of numerous new executions and mass arrests, while a special curfew shut down all theatres, motion picture houses and night clubs in Paris for three days.

A Swiss radio broadcast heard in London said that groups of persons described as Communists carried out what appeared to be mass attacks on German troops in the Greater Paris region last night.

Some soldiers were killed, and immediate reprisals were reported. A number of persons were shot summarily, while an undisclosed number were taken as hostages, facing death by firing squads or the hangman's noose unless the ringleaders surrender.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT
(Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc.)

Extension Unlikely

Washington, April 21.

THE equivocation and evasion, the stalling and side stepping, the procrastination and delay marking the handling of the labor problems arising from our war effort constitute a record of which no one has reason to be proud — quite the reverse. Now that the President, forced by public opinion, Congressional agitation and general gravity of affairs, seems about to act, the larger facts about this business are clearer than ever before.

THE outstanding one, of course, is that neither the executive nor the legislative branch has shown even reasonable firmness in meeting this issue. Both have temporized in a feeble and disheartening manner. Between them they have allowed the country to drift for the eighteen months of our war preparations with no real labor policy at all. It still drifts. The cost in materials, in time and in money has been very great. The dissatisfaction among the people, reflected in Congress, is intense.

—O—
SO far as Mr. Roosevelt is concerned, he started out on the theory that no legislation about strikes or wages or hours or the closed shop or anything else along labor lines was necessary. His influence successfully blocked every effort of Congress to legislate in any of these directions. Compelled now to modify his position, he still insists upon keeping labor policy wholly in his own hands, and by personal request, has had the Connally bill debate in the Senate postponed until he can present his recommendations in a message and radio talk. Probably this will have the effect of again killing the more drastic of the pending legislative proposals. Probably it means enactment of a bill embodying the concessions the President has been able to obtain from the labor politicians with Continued On Page Two

WEATHER AND ARISTOTLE

It doesn't require much study of the history of the science of meteorology to see that Mark Twain's famous remark about the weather—that everyone talks about it but nobody does anything about it—was literally true for about twenty centuries preceding the seventeenth.

Some of the world's earliest writings contain fragmentary references to weather phenomena, but the first known effort at systematic discussion was the Meteorologica of Aristotle (384-322 B. C.). Probably Aristotle's habit of walking up and down in the garden as he taught his pupils is an explanation of his interest in the science.

Anyway, his pupil, Theophrastus, wrote articles on wind and weather signs, but with that meteorology stood still for 2,000 years. Then in 1607 Galileo invented the thermometer, and in 1643 Torricelli produced the barometer. Then people really began to do something about the weather, even though they couldn't control it.

Until the present war came along, most city dwellers obtained their information on what kind of weather the morrow would bring from official forecasts, and farmers depended upon them to a great extent, also. But the farmer, through having wide open spaces about him and the meteorological laboratory of the sky available for his observations, became a weather forecaster in his own right. Frequently he astonished visitors from city and town with the correctness of his forecasts.

Now that forecasts on weather futures are limited, city residents are becoming interested in the farmer's method of obtaining meteorological information. So pronounced has the interest in amateur forecasting become that the Hayden Planetarium in New York City has announced a new presentation entitled Weather Signs in the Sky, which will deal with the truth and fiction of amateur weather guesses.

When the day comes that millions of Americans will stand in the street staring intently at the sky, it will no longer be possible for them to identify visitors from the hinterland through the latter's attempts to scan the linear vertical dimensions of the city's buildings.

HOW'S YOUR CELTAFAL?

Celtafal Day will be here before men are prepared for it, as usual, and the number that will be seen with last year's rather seedy model will greatly outnumber those equipped with new acquisitions. Celtafal Day may also be known as Visca Day or Cellophane Day.

Celtafal, civa and cellophane, it has been divulged, will henceforth be the raw material of which "straw" hats are made. At least for the duration.

It's all part of a sketch drawn by the War Production Board to show what the war-time well-dressed man will look like. No radical change in the styles of suits now being sold is contemplated. Wool and silk socks are out. Shirts will be lighter in color and not of as high quality as in former years. Shoes will be conservative to conserve leather.

Overcoats for next winter will be cut conservatively but will be as warm as ever. And the good old fedora will continue to be made of fur felt as before the war.

Strenuous efforts are being made to get American supplies to the Russian front on schedule to disrupt Hitler's schedule.

Crime at Castaway by EDITH BRISTOL

CHAPTER SIXTEEN

"I know it's not my mystery," I agreed. "But your uncle and your aunt—and you, too—have been so kind to me since I came to the ranch that I almost feel it is my affair. I wish I could help you solve it."

"I wish you could," Lance Gregg set his jaw.

"Allen is doing his best, I know. But I think he depends too much on finger prints and foot prints, tire marks and finding the gun. That isn't what I'm looking for. That isn't what is going to find the murderer."

"What is?"

"Motive. Something that's been going on here, perhaps for months, maybe for years. Allen's counting too much on tire tracks—and in the rain that fell the night my uncle was killed there were no tire tracks."

"He thinks the gun is the most important clue," I suggested.

"I know he does. As if the man who shot that gun was going to put it away where it could be found. Here's a ranch of 6,000 acres. There—He waved toward the ocean, its gray now changing to purple in the setting sun. "There's the whole Pacific Ocean. Who's going to put a gun away when it's that easy to dispose of it? It's motive that will show who did it. If I could prove what—" he broke off, looked at me squarely and asked: "Did you hear Worth Durfee say he left five thousand dollars with my uncle the night he called?"

"Yes," I said. "But the sheriff told me not to mention it."

"He's trying to trace it—he doesn't want the public to know. But the bank did cash a check for Durfee that morning, in twenties and hundreds, just as he spoke. And he might have left it there—he checked himself again, as if he were thinking out loud and something broke his train of thought.

"When I heard Mr. Durfee say that," I said (I was thinking out loud, too) "I was surprised. For I didn't think Mr. Gregg would accept money like that—he was too businesslike. He'd want it done more regularly."

"That's the devil of it all," Lance said. "He flicked the bridle rein against his hand as he spoke as if he would brush away something unpleasant. "He needed ready money. He always kept a good substantial balance in the bank. Always had plenty of ready money. But in the months he was in the hospital things got involved. That's why he sent for me. He didn't entirely trust Harry Craven."

It was on the tip of my tongue to speak of Gregg's conversation with Craven, that last afternoon. But I checked it. Perhaps I was being too much influenced by this personable young man, so tall and strong, striding beside me. Anyhow I'd told Allen—I could tell Lance later, if needed. And there was always the memory of the bit of conversation I'd heard from Lance, as well. That always bobbed up to bother me.

"The final payment on the Gallina Dam construction isn't paid yet—it will be due in a few days. And in the meantime—if you could know the demands for money—"

"I made out his checks and wrote letters," I said. "I do know."

"Yes. You would," Lance agreed with me. "He needed ready money right now. So he might have accepted it and signed that receipt—it was an emergency, you know. Durfee must be telling the truth about that—"

I asked him a point blank question then. "Do you believe that Worth Durfee killed your uncle?"

Lance answered me just as directly. "I do not. I dislike Durfee. I know he's cold. I've always disliked him. But I don't think he did it. He might have shot once—but there were three shots fired. Either the killer was a darned poor shot—you'd have to be pretty blind to miss at twelve feet—or else the man who shot my uncle was a madman and kept on shooting. Had you thought about that?"

I hadn't. I admitted. "But there might have been somebody hiding near the cabin," I said. Then I told him what Miss Baldwin had said—that someone had tried to break in when she was there. He listened carefully.

"You're moving up to the main house tonight," he said, "and liking it."

That missing money! Why wasn't its disappearance more public? Dropping off to sleep in my new quarters—the little east room upstairs in the big house—that five thousand dollars was my last waking thought.

It was my first thought the next morning. To me, five thousand was a fortune. To Walter Gregg, I should have imagined, the sum was pin money or peanuts. And yet, according to Lance, his uncle had been in such immediate need of cash that he would have accepted the money as part of a compromise with an ancient enemy. It didn't make sense to me. Maybe I didn't understand much about finance, I decided. At least not about finance on the Castaway scale.

Still less could I understand why, at the inquest, the coroner had so carefully refrained from leading questions that would disclose Worth Durfee's statement about the bills left with Walter Gregg.

Later in the day I understood it, in part at least—and saw why Sheriff Allen had held back the possible theft of the bills as one detail of the unsolved murder. My understanding came about this way:

I was working for Miss Gregg. At last we were making a business like start on the letters, telegrams and papers that had accumulated in the past few days.

Allen came in, dropped into a chair, rather wearily I thought, and asked for Miss Gregg, dropping his broad felt hat to the floor beside him and wiping his forehead with a characteristic gesture.

I called Martha from her own suite and she came in—Ace and Deuce as usual padding beside her and taking their post at her feet as she sat down.

"Guess I'll have to bother you with some more questions, Martha," he began.

"What now? You look fagged, Nathan. This is getting you all worn out."

"Now, I want to know more about the servants—all that were at the house that night. How many of them have had their days off since Walter was killed?"

Martha went to her secretary and came back with a systematic-looking account book. "I keep it all down. This week has been very irregular, for the regular days of all the staff have been upset. Let me see—Issu, Kober, cook and housemaid—Dillon, that's the groom—" she checked down the page of the ledger. "Ordinarily Issu has Monday; Kober, Tuesday, and so on; but this week with all our cars so busy doing errands and so many people going and coming, they've all been put off. Both Issu and Kober offered to delay their days until next week—and the cook and maid have theirs tomorrow."

"Then none of the staff would have been in Gallina since the murder?"

"Martha looked very thoughtful. "I won't say that it was impossible for one of them to have picked up a ride—after working hours—and gone to Gallina. But not in working hours. You see we drive our staff to Gallina or to the bus stop on their days off—the distance and the transportation are the difficulties in keeping good help here. The cook has his own car and he and his wife take their days together..."

Allen nodded. Martha concluded: "But during working hours I'd say that not one of the staff could have been in Gallina. Why?"

"Durfee claims to have left money with Walter, that night."

"I didn't hear a word about that. How much?"

"I know you didn't. I told Lance—but nobody else. It was a lot of money, he says. Five thousand dollars."

"Why would Durfee—or anybody else—be carrying around that much money?"

Then Allen explained it all. Repeated Durfee's tale as told to us. Martha remained thoughtful. "It might be true," she said, after consideration. "He does queer things. I always thought it was queer his living up there with only those two old people to look after him. He knows he can't drive a car well so it's queer he doesn't have a regular driver. He's always been stubborn, though—he and Walter used to be friends, once, you know—"

"What happened?" Allen asked. "Nobody ever knew. After Pauline and Walter were divorced, Walter and Durfee had a falling out. Then they quarreled over that boundary line. You know all about that. It was all so silly—the few feet of land involved meant so little to either one of the men but they were both stubborn. Neither one of them would yield an inch. It's cost them so much more than the value of the land. But you know Walter—"

"Sure, I know Durfee, too. So you think your brother would have taken a cash compromise for the damage suit?"

Miss Gregg frowned and patted Deuce's head absently.

"Not ordinarily. The word 'compromise' didn't exist for my brother, usually. But since his accident he's been—well, different. So many extra expenses. Then Pauline—he knows how much she costs. And Estelle—she's an expensive luxury."

"She's expensive, at least," agreed Allen wryly.

"Captains of the Clouds" is a story of the Royal Canadian Air Force, and it is a story of glory, a story of thousands of men who hourly risk their lives that democracy may survive. Magnificently directed and photographed, superbly acted and brilliantly written, the new motion picture is one of the most vital and enthralling entertainments the screen has provided in many years.

Red, White, Blue Garden
Can be Charming

- 1—Alyssum
- 2—White Petunias or Alyssum
- 3—Red Petunia
- 4—Blue Purple Petunia
- 5—Blue Purple Petunia
- 6—Red Petunia

Red, white and blue gardens will be popular this year and can be charming. If you have a suitable space somewhere in your home grounds a small formal garden like the one illustrated will make an attractive picture throughout the summer.

In the center may be a small pool in which birds can drink and bathe, or a bird bath, sundial, fountain or any similar feature. Around it a ribbon planting of dwarf sweet alyssum is suggested.

The outside border of this garden should be planted in a blue tone, and there is no better material available than ageratum. The four center beds may be planted alternately with red and blue, or more accurately purple, petunias. These accommodating flowers give the most reliable color masses with the least care. It is not necessary to keep the faded flowers picked off, and the plants sheared back, in order to keep new blossoms opening.

Of course the so-called blue petunias are not really blue. In fact, there are few blue flowers. Nearly all have enough red in their pigmentation to make them purple, or lavender; but it is convenient to group them all together as members of the blue family, where the blue dominates.

For a good effect in such a garden as this, one must be sure to sow good, well fixed varieties. Remarkable progress has been made in recent years in breeding dwarf, compact plants, well covered with blooms of uniform color.

and Joan Fontaine sharing the co-starring honors.

This vehicle reunites the team chiefly responsible for the hit picture "Rebecca," which received the New York Critics Award for "best picture of the year"—and Director Alfred Hitchcock and Miss Fontaine.

Sticking closely to the psychological, mystery and romantic elements of the popular novel, "Before the Fact," the story was adapted to the screen as "Suspicion" by Joan Harrison, Alma Reville and Samson Raphaelson.

HIGH SCHOOL NINE BEATS ST. FRANCIS IN ONE-SIDED GAME

Bunnies Walk Away With Game Played With Boys
From Eddington

FINAL SCORE IS 17 TO 3

Local Cub Tabled Two Runs
In The First Inning

By Jack Gill

Nearly everything imaginable happened yesterday up on the corner of Wilson avenue and Garfield streets, as the Bristol High School Bunnies all but annihilated the St. Francis Industrial School nine by a 17 to 3 count. The home team combined seven hits, two of which were home runs by Capriotti and S. Sagolla, eleven walks and made the best of five St. Francis errors to account for their top-heavy verdict.

The local club tabled two runs in the first, four in the second, seven in the third and four more in the fourth. They just stood around during the final two cantos.

Army Capriotti caught hold of one of Jones' pitches in the second and blasted a home run into left field. Silvers Sagolla rapped another into the same sector in the third inning. The seven run flareup in this frame featured hits by Davis and Scancelli, in addition to Sagolla's knock. These three singles, pieced together by two walks, a wild pitch, a hit batsman and an error, were good for seven markers.

Four more runs were added in the fourth inning on no hits. DiAngelo, Capriotti and Cialella all drew free transportation to first. Davis and Sagolla were safe on bobbles by Simpson and Apgar at second and third respectively. This, combined with DiAngelo's swipe of second, brought four tallies across on little batting effort at all.

Joe Sagolla hung around to hang up an easy three hit triumph. Mayo Scancelli, with two singles, paced the Cardinals at bat. For St. Francis, Broccolini had two of their three safe blows.

EIGHT TEAMS ENTER DIAMOND LEAGUE

Eight teams have entered the Diamond Baseball League, which will be for youths 16 years of age and under. At a meeting of the circuit held Monday night, it was decided to open the season either May 11th or May 18th. It was also decided to hold the franchise open for another week.

The teams and their managers are as follows: Harriman, Marvin Walters; Fourth Ward, Thomas Gross; Volte-Texaco, Danny Mazzillo; Fifth Ward, Gene DeLese; Bristol Aces, Nick Gesuladi; Third Ward, Len Simons; Franklin, John Fields; Croydon, William Bartholomew.

Four of the eight teams have produced either birth certificates or baptism papers proving the age of their players. The managers decided to increase the age limit from 15 to 16 years of age.

The circuit is awaiting the decision of the Bristol Suburban League before it decides whether to play twilight ball or week-end ball.

ernment we now enjoy, there would be a puppet in the White House.

"In this great American crisis, the full weight of public sentiment must be directed toward patriotic, self-sacrificing devotion to government and country so that this nation can fulfill its destiny as the last real citadel of free men.

"If we should ever experience the catastrophe of a defeat by the Axis, every state government and local agency would be subservient to the ruthless rule of a foe to whom decency and honor are outlawed words.

"Our food supplies would be confiscated, our custom houses raided and there would be levied against us an indemnity of several billions of dollars... enough to keep us bowed for generations to come.

"The history of conquered nations abroad tells us that if Germany wins, our social and economic liberties will perish. Freedom of speech and liberty of the press will be dead. Fraternal organizations, labor unions and service clubs will be abolished. In such an hour, we cannot afford to turn blindly from the brutal facts of war.

"It is not my intention to paint a picture of gloom and desolation with the idea that ours is a hopeless task. Far from it. I am convinced that we not only can win this war but administer such a staggering blow to the enemy that the despised forces of totalitarianism will be wiped forever from the face of the earth.

"We must take inspiration from other generations of Americans to express the courage which must always be humanity's armor against those who live by the sword.

"There is no stopping place for us now short of complete victory.

"To win, we must tap the full force of our manpower and industrial resources. Regardless of the sacrifice and cost, we must and will win. Our task is before us. It will be a test of love of country, love of liberty and love of human progress.

"As the nation's first industrial state, we must produce an unprecedented stream of trucks, tanks, guns and cannon so gigantic in volume so that we can smash the war lords responsible for this struggle and blast their barbaric military machines into eternity.

"We, as a free and enlightened nation, must follow the light of truth and wisdom which has sustained civilization through the ages.

"This is a war of free people against the driven, deluded peoples who are being misled, deceived and betrayed by their power-drunk leaders.

"We regarded Japan with contempt four months ago, yet in one full swoop, she gobbled up 95 per cent of the world's rubber supply; huge quantities of its tin and enough oil to make the empire of the Rising Sun a world menace for months to come.

"It is a time when men must speak out courageously and demand a one hundred per cent war effort. Only through men with the courage to speak out frankly even at the risk of persecution and abuse, can we retain the American way of life.

"Only by a consolidation of our interests can we relieve and dispel the explosive pressures of war.

"This we must do in time to retain and preserve the solvency of our country.

"It is an American crisis... and as Americans we must and will meet it! Ours must be a victory for decency and freedom!"

drug stores are well supplied should a disaster occur here.

In Edgely, 13 women gave 217 hours; Mrs. Thompson's group of 25 women gave 190 hours; Mrs. Groome's group of six women gave 126½ hours. The total for March reads 217 finished sewed garments, 72 knitted garments, and 2413 surgical dressings.

The treasurer, Mrs. E. Linton Martin, read her report for the month, and Mrs. Frank Lehman, war fund chairman, reported $15,890.80 as the present total. Silvio Ciotoli's concert was a great success, and Red Cross benefited by his splendid effort, as evidenced by the proceeds which augment the war fund.

The juniors under Mrs. Carl Foell have done admirably. They, with the senior branch of Red Cross, furnished milk when and wherever needed.

Mr. Harris, chairman of first aid, reported 40 classes in progress in the Bristol area.

The election of board members and officers was also held at this meeting with the following result:

Board members: Mrs. William DuHamel, Mrs. Samuel Roberts, Chauncey Stoneback, Jr., Mrs. Elizabeth Anderson, Mrs. William G. Disaster Plans Are Being Co-Ordinated addresses of individuals holding keys to the buildings listed. Mrs. Davis enumerated the various churches, cafeterias, club houses and schools.

An inventory of clothing, blankets, muslin and other supplies which might be needed in a disaster, was given by Mrs. Clarence Moyer, head of the Clothing Committee. Thirty-six stores have been listed and when the inventory was made there were 830 yards of muslin on hand suitable for bandages.

Chief of Police, Linford J. Jones, of the Shelter Committee, told the group that his committee had worked more or less in connection with the Food Committee and that practically the same buildings had been listed.

It was stated by Mrs. William DuHamel, president of the Bristol Branch of the Red Cross, that there was ample money available for supplies which might be needed and for other purposes due to a disaster.

The Boy Scouts are organized and ready to serve as messengers and also as orderlies on ambulances, Herbert A. Pettit, reported. There are 70 Scouts in Bristol Borough and 25 have first-aid certificates, he said.

Mrs. Russell DeLong told the group that it would be the duty of the Transportation Committee, which she heads, to take members of the other committees to the scene of the disaster and to transport the injured to hospital, as well as providing transportation for refugees. Mrs. DeLong also reported that in case of there being the necessity for the moving and storage of furniture that such would be taken care of by her committee.

The Survey Committee of which John S. Roberts, is chairman, will make surveys of the affected area, roads, bridges and estimate the damages and funds required to rehabilitate the territory. This committee is organized.

All druggists here have increased their stocks of medical and surgical supplies. Asa Fabian, of the Medical Supply Committee reported. He gave the thought that perhaps there was a shortage of triangular bandages and sterile compresses.

Jesse Carr, of the Rescue Group, said that more roller bandages were needed as well as some other supplies. Mr.

Carr described how his committee had divided Bristol Township into two zones and Bristol Borough into two zones. He was of the opinion that some supplies should be made available at once to those who are going to function in the rescue and first-aid work.

Chauncey E. Stoneback, Jr., who is chairman of the Disaster Committee of the Red Cross, requested Franklin Wallin to outline the work of the Red Cross Disaster Committee which he said was to provide food, shelter and clothing and to supplement in the giving of medical services.

Mr. Wallin also told of the work of the Information and Registration Committee which will be more or less of an office personnel taking care of registration in case of an influx of refugees and acting as a clearing house for information should the disaster be of a local nature.</
